

Dear Staff at Mindbytes,

While the Covid-19 Pandemic halted the world, one aspect of life among others did not cease to exist, thanks to the spectrum of online education. As a student myself, after the initial novelty of fascinating online learning tools, the drudgery set in; thus leading to the conclusion that I was not particularly a fan of online classes.

With the delay in my final exams being announced, I had plenty of free time. This is when the hero organization enters the story. To exhaust my unreal ability to be lazy and while away time, my father suggested that I consider joining The Young Entrepreneurs Program at Mindbytes.

The course intrigued me and I decided I wanted to be a part of it. This decision of mine was fuelled by my need for a source of boredom cure and I joined the program, but not without a tiny bit of skepticism.

Now that I've completed the course, I cannot express how thankful I am for enrolling myself in it. It was undoubtedly one of the most rewarding experiences. I got to learn the best, from the best and I cannot be more certain of it. The detailing that went into building the process of learning and the amount of effort Lakshmi Sir and Pavithra Ma'am put in was impeccable. The most amazing part of learning to build a business was the amount of autonomy and freedom to be creative that we got. We were given a template that allowed our imagination to run wild, all while making sure that we were also practical; if not right now, at least futuristically practical.

I can confidently say that this was one of my few fruitful experiences with online learning. I cannot begin to imagine the amount of fun I would've had if I'd gotten the opportunity to attend this class in person. Never have I wanted to move to the US more. But above all, I got the opportunity to become acquainted with two incredibly passionate people, willing to even give up on their sleep to enrich our experience.

Benjamin Franklin once said, "An investment in knowledge pays the best interest" and this perhaps, is the finest interest-paying investment I've ever been a part of. Thank you for that!

Love,

Manasvini
